More Light.

BY DEAR LEE.

God said, "Let there be light,"
And light from darkness sprang;
Then shouted all his sons for joy,
The stars together sang.

The darkness fled away,
At the approach of light,
The glorious sun made glad the day,
And pale o' the night.

Then stood the mountains forth,
The skies put on their blue,
The grass and groves dressed up in green,
The flowers in every hue.

Yet though so busily,
Wrought the enchantress, change,
Long ages of the light it took,
That chaos to arrange.

So, when Messiah came,
He said, "Let there be light!"
And thought the sons of darkness raged,
He vanquished moral night.

He made a brotherhood,
Of man on every shore,
That nation, creed, or sect, or blood,
Should vex this bond no more.

"Blessed be the world from sin."
He said, and abroad his grace,
He gave his life, yet centuries failed,
To purify our race.

Nor is this story appeased,
Nor shall it ever be;
"More light," the watch-word of the soul,
Throughout eternity.

Our Story Teller.

Libbie's Lecture.

BY MRS. H. M. LADD WARNER.

"Barn bread again!" exclaimed Mr. Haynes, pushing away the slice he had taken, with a gesture of impatience. "I really do wish, Mary, that you would pay a little more attention to your culinary duties. Everything is either overdone or underdone. It anything in the world annoys me it is dinners got up in this manner."

Mrs. Haynes' pale face flushed up a little; perhaps the heightened color was occasioned by the rebuke—perhaps by an emotion of shame, on hearing her husband utter a falsehood; for Mr. Haynes' assertion was thoroughly false. A poorly cooked meal was a thing of very rare occurrence in his wife's well regulated household.

Libbie fidgeted in her chair a moment, and then spoke out quite bluntly—
"It was you that burned the bread, father, you know mother never burns her bread!"

"I burned the bread, child! How could I burn the bread?"
"By neglecting to listen to the carriage-house door. Little Jamie climbed into the carriage—fell out, and cut his head badly on the wheel. While we were dressing the wound, the bread was burned."

"For mercy sake, Mary!" ejaculated Mr. Haynes, "why do you persist in allowing that child to play in the back yard?"

"Why, father!" said Libbie, "you told mother only yesterday to allow him to play in the back yard every forenoon." Mr. Haynes pretended not to have heard his daughter's last assertion, but inquired where Jamie was. He was in his crib. He had cried himself to sleep.

That evening Mr. Haynes came home in unusual spirits.

Libbie, said he, as soon as he entered the supper-room, "what do you suppose brought Henry Fuller to my office this afternoon?"

"How can I tell," Libbie replied, with glowing cheek. "Legal business, no doubt."

"Now, Libbie, you do not speak frankly," said her father, laughing. "He came to ask permission to address Miss Libbie Haynes as his future wife. He is respectably connected—has a good income—is very moral—and—told him he had my hearty approval; has he yours, my daughter?"

"No, father," Libbie replied in rather a hesitating voice.

"Why Libbie!" ejaculated Mr. Haynes, in a surprised, interrogating way. "I thought you liked him."

"Well then I do," she replied, speaking out honestly, though a flush of maiden shame suffused her cheek. "But I have decided never to marry."

"Decided never to marry?" repeated her father. "What has occasioned such a resolution?"

"A fear lest my husband should make me as miserable as you do my dear, patient mother," she answered, speaking very hurriedly, lest her courage might give way.

"I make your mother miserable?" exclaimed Mr. Haynes, looking like just what he felt himself to be, a much injured man.

"Yes, you make mother very miserable. Only think how unjustly you spoke to her at dinner to-day; and you know she always makes excellent bread. Then you declared that everything was either overdone or underdone, and she had been to so much trouble to prepare your favorite dish. You never commend any effort she makes to please you, although she is constantly consulting your tastes and caprices. Here is a life of perpetual sacrifice—yours of continual exaction." Mr. Haynes walked hurriedly about the room. Libbie went up to him, laid her hand on his arm and continued very meekly—"Dear father, I know this rebuke is very rude and unbecoming from the lips of a child; but you demanded my reasons, and this has troubled me so long. Will you forgive me, father?"

"Yes, yes, child; but go away now. I am sure I never thought of this. Why has your mother never spoken of it, if she finds me arbitrary and exacting?"

"Because she fears you, father."

"Fears me, Libbie? as though I frightened her."

"You do, father."

"Libbie! you will certainly make me angry."

"But, father, you do chastise her, daily. Sometimes with the eye; sometimes with words; besides, accidents occasioned by your own neglect, you invariably lay at her door." How it grieves me to see my strong father burden my weak mother with all his own omissions of duty. Yes, I am positive I will never marry until I am satisfied that my husband will commend as well as condemn. Mr. Haynes did not come down to tea that evening. He had a miserable headache, and stayed in the library. Libbie understood the headache; and she had some misgivings about the course she had pursued, and worried herself not a little about what she termed her unflinching lecture.

The next morning at breakfast there was nothing in Mr. Haynes' manner indicating a memory of the conversation of the foregoing evening; only when he did not take his third cup of coffee, and his wife timidly asked if he found it unpalatable, he replied, quite earnestly—"O! no, it is very good," and really added, "You know you make excellent coffee, Mary." She did know it, certainly, for her taste was quite as delicate as her husband's; but she could not repress a slight manifestation of surprise, blended with gratitude, on hearing the first commendation since the honey-moon.

In the evening, when Henry Fuller called, Mr. Haynes and Libbie were sole occupants of the parlor.

"Henry," said the former, as soon as salutations were exchanged, "what do you suppose Libbie has been saying?"

"Without waiting for a reply he continued—She declares she will never marry until she is positive that her husband will commend her success in any undertaking, as well as to condemn any failure she may unfortunately meet with."

"She is quite right," said Henry, very gravely. "My mother has just been speaking to me on the same subject. She assures me it is habitual."

"She assures me it is habitual," said Henry, "and she prides herself on it. I praise their wives, while they reserve to themselves the prerogative of rebuking and condemning them for every peccadillo which comes under their Argus eye. I, too, have noticed these things in my brief experience; but if Libbie should give her happiness into my keeping, I trust I shall not play the exacting and arbitrary master, but the friend and adviser. Counselling, if need be; listening to admonitions from her if circumstances render it necessary."

Libbie had finally decided to trust Henry. They have been two years married, and never yet has he complained, if ill-luck occasionally attends her efforts in the kitchen. Mr. Haynes is decidedly an improved man, and confidently assures his wife, that Libbie's lecture opened his eyes, if it did inflict a poignant wound at the time.

A SAILOR'S STORY.

A young sailor, who had been rowing around the world for several years, on his returning home was constantly and amusingly lionized on account of his having had personal relations with cannibals, acrobats, tigers, sharks, pirates, and other creatures which inspire the untravelled mind with terror. He hated, above all things, to spin yarns but still he was constantly beset to do so. Being at a party one evening, he was, as usual, importuned to "spin them a yarn," and finally, at the request of his father, he related the following harrowing tale, the circumstances mentioned in which he saw with his own eyes:

As one of the Panama steamers was leaving the harbor of Havana, a beautiful widow lady, named Howard was standing by the gunwale, on which her son, a little boy some four years old, was sitting, playing on a sugar flag-boat, which his fond mother had purchased for him in port, of an ingenious confectioner. The child was greatly delighted with the toy, and blew vigorously, while Mrs. Howard seemed to enjoy the little fellow's delight as much as he enjoyed his flag-boat. The transcendent beauty of the mother, and the angelic loveliness of the child, riveted every eye that observed them, and various were the speculations advanced as to their history.

After some time, a sailor shouted—"A shark! a shark!" and everybody crowded to see the huge creature that was swimming alongside the vessel. As the passengers were remarking upon the appearance of the shark, a shriek was suddenly heard—then a splash; and quick as lightning the ravenous monster darted upon his prey. Little Tommy Howard had fallen from the gunwale, and the widowed mother was now childless. Mrs. Howard, who had fainted was carried below in a state of insensibility.

The shark still swam by the vessel's side. Some of the men determined, if possible, to avenge little Tommy's death; and baiting a hook with a piece of fresh beef, they cast it overboard. Almost immediately the shark swallowed it; and fifty stalwart arms piled lustily at the stout rope. He was an immense monster, and struggled oilently. As soon as his nose was pulled out of the water, a number of Californians began to practice pistol-shooting at his eyes. Their balls soon put a quiver upon him, and he was hauled, lifeless and limp on board. When his huge bulk had been stretched along the deck, it was proposed that he should be opened, and the remains of the boy taken from his stomach and given a Christian burial. The proposition was immediately acted upon, and soon the carcass was laid open; when, to the utter astonishment of every one present, the boy was found snugly seated between a couple of the monster's ribs, still playing his flag-boat.

The young sailor has not been annoyed since that evening, by request to "spin a yarn."

Miscellaneous.

A SAILOR'S STORY OF A PIG.

A curious animal is a pig, gentlemen! Very cunning, too—a great deal more sensible than people give him credit for.

I had a pig aboard my ship that was too knowing by half. All hands were fond of him, and there was not one of board that would have seen him injured.

There was a dog on board, too, and the pig and he were capital friends; they ate out of the same plate, walked about the deck together, and would lie down side by side under the bulwarks in the sun.

The only thing they ever quarreled about was lodgings. The dog, you see, sir, had got a kennel for himself; the pig had nothing of the sort. We did not think he needed one; but he had his own notions upon that matter.

Why should Toby be better housed of a night than he? Well, sir, he had somehow got into his head that possession is nine parts of law, and though Toby tried to show him the rights of the question, he was so pig-headed that he either would not or could not understand. So every night it came to be "catch as catch can." If the dog got in first, he would show his teeth, and the other had to lie under the boat, or to find the softest plank where he could; if the pig was found to be in possession, the dog could not turn him out, but looked out for his revenge next time.

One evening, gentlemen, it had been blowing hard all day, and I had just ordered close-reefed topsails, for the gale was increasing, and there was a good deal of sea running, and it was coming on to be wet; in short, I said to myself, as I called down the companion-ladder to the boy to bring up my pea-jacket, "We are going to have a dirty night." The pig was slipping and tumbling about the decks, for the ship lay over so much with the breeze, boing close-hauled, that he could not keep his hoofs. At last, he thought he would secure his berth for the night, though it wanted a good bit to dusk.

But, lo and behold! Toby had been of the same mind, and there he was safely housed. "Umph, umph!" says piggy, as he turned and looked up at the black sky to windward; but Toby did not offer to move. At last, the pig seemed to give it up, and took a turn or two, as if he was making up his mind which was the warmest corner. Presently he trudged off to the lee scuppers where the tin plate was lying that they ate their cold 'tatoes off. Piggy takes up the plate in his mouth, and carries it to a part of the deck where the dog could see it, but some way from the kennel; then, turning his tail toward the dog, he begins to act as if he was eating out of the plate, making it rattle, and munching with his mouth pretty loud. What, thinks Toby, 'has piggy got victuals there?' and he pricked up his ears and looked out toward the plate, making a little whining. "Champ, champ," goes the pig, taking not the least notice of the dog; and down goes his mouth to the plate again. Toby couldn't stand that any longer; victuals and he not there! Out he runs, and comes up in front of the pig, with his mouth watering, and pushes his cold nose into the empty plate. Like a shot gentlemen, the pig turned tail, and was snug in the kennel before Toby well knew whether there was any meat or not in the plate.—Animal Traits and Characteristics by the Rev. J. G. Wood.

MIXED FARMING.

We think that we have hitherto referred to the practice, too prevalent among farmers, of devoting themselves almost exclusively to one branch of production, when a mixed husbandry would conduce in a greater degree to profit and to the improvement of their farms. The subject is, however, one which is not easily exhausted, and we desire to urge now, at the opening of the Spring season, some additional reasons for the adoption of a system different from that practiced in many sections of the country.

The error to which we refer may be briefly stated to consist of too exclusive attention to stock and grass, among graziers and dairymen, and too close devotion to grain, among the grain growers. We hold that a mixture of the two, in almost every instance, to a greater extent than is usual, would be found beneficial.

There are multitudes of instances among dairy farmers, where scarcely an acre of grass is grown, or at least not enough to furnish the grain feed required for the cows, or even a bundle of straw for a bed for them to rest upon. We suspect that very few of the dairymen on what are called grass lands raise a sufficient supply of grain for use on their farms. In many instances their barns are barren of straw or litter of any kind; their cows lie in stables unfit for animals of any kind, and the owners are subjected to a large expense for feed to carry the stock well through the Spring. All this, too, while acres upon acres of their grass are run out, and need plowing up and re-seeding to secure a profitable crop.

We hold to the opinion that dairy farmers—with few or no exceptions—should raise enough of roots, corn, oats, &c., to furnish all the feed which their stock requires in addition to the hay. The advantages of this system are numerous. There is the saving of expense in money for the required feed; the improvement of the land by a judicious rotation and re-seeding at proper intervals; the production of a larger aggregate amount of fodder from a given number of acres; the increase in the quantity of manure; improved comfort and cleanly condition of the animals, where straw is used freely in the stables for litter; and consequently upon all these a larger profit upon the farms, coupled with a permanent improvement of the soil.

There is too frequently a mistaken idea that all the land is needed for pasture or meadow, and consequently none can be spared for grain or root crops. If such economical farmers would reflect for a moment, that an acre of good land planted in corn will produce as much value of corn stocks as of hay, to say nothing of the gain itself; that an acre of potatoes, carrots, or turnips, fed in conjunction with hay, will give a greater value of feed than the same acre in grass; and that an acre in oats, which, perhaps, is the least profitable crop, will furnish, in straw and grain, more sustenance for cattle than the same acre devoted to hay. If these facts were more generally realized, there would be less aversion to plowing up grass lands among our dairy farmers. A mixed system cannot fail to produce great improvements upon any farm devoted chiefly to dairying. And to us nothing about the farm looks more desolate than to see the barnyards and stables destitute of straw or litter of any kind, and the cattle lying on the filthy and wet floors of the stables, as not unfrequently happens.

We will endeavor, in another article, to present some reasons why grain-growing farmers should keep more stock and pursue also a mixed system.

FRIENDS AND RELATIVES OF THE BRAVE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

And OINTMENT.

All who have Friends or Relatives in the Army or Navy should take especial care that they be amply supplied with these Pills and Ointment, and where the Brave Soldiers and Sailors have neglected to provide themselves with them, no better present can be sent them by their Friends. They have been proved to be the Soldier's never-failing friend in the hour of need.

Coughs and Cold-affecting Troops. Will be speedily relieved and effectually cured by using these admirable medicines, and by paying proper attention to the directions which are attached to each pot or box.

Stomachic and Vent of Appetite. These feelings which so sadden us usually arise from trouble or anxiousness, obstructed perspiration, or eating and drinking what is unwholesome, thus disturbing the healthful action of the liver and stomach. These organs must be relieved, if you desire to be well. The Pills taken according to the printed instructions will quickly produce a healthy action in both liver and stomach, and as a natural consequence a clear head and good appetite.

Weakness or Debility induced by Over-Exertion. Will soon disappear by the use of these valuable Pills, and the Soldier will quickly acquire additional strength. Never let the Bow be either confined or unduly acted upon. It may seem strange that Holloway's Pills should be recommended for Dysentery and Flux, many persons supposing that they would increase the relaxation. This is a great mistake, for these pills will correct the liver & stomach, and thus remove all the acid humors from the system, however deranged. While health and strength follow as a matter of course. Nothing will so speedily restore the relaxation of the Bowels so sure as this famous medicine.

Various Accidents: Indiscretions of Youth. Sores and Ulcers, Blotch and Swellings, can with certainty be radically cured, if the pills are taken night and morning, and the Ointment be freely used as stated in the printed instructions. If treated in any other manner, they dry up in one part or break out in another. Whereas this Ointment will remove the humors from the system and leave the Patient in a vigorous and healthy man. It will require a little perseverance in bad cases to insure a lasting cure.

For Wounds, either occasioned by the Sabre, or Bullet, or Sore, or To which every Soldier and Sailor are liable, there are no medicines so safe, sure and convenient, as Holloway's Pills and Ointment. The Poor wounded and almost dying sufferer might have his wounds dressed immediately, if he would only provide himself with this matchless Ointment, which should be thrust into the wound and smeared all around it, then covered with a piece of linen from his Knapsack and compressed with a handkerchief. Taking night and morning 6 or 8 Pills, will cool the system and prevent inflammation.

Every Soldier's Knapsack and Seaman's Chest should be provided with these valuable remedies.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "HOLLOWAY, NEW-YORK AND LONDON," are discernable as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same knowing them to be spurious.

Sold at the manufacture of Professor Holloway, 50 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine, throughout the civilized world, in Pots at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

There is considerable saving by taking the large size.

Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

Dealers in my well known medicines can have Show Cards, Circulars, &c., sent them, FREE OF EXPENSE by addressing Thomas Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Inu and Sentiment

—A lawyer riding through the town of Worcester, stopped at a cottage to inquire his way. The lady of the house told him he must keep on straight for some time, then turn to the right; but said that she herself was going to pass the road that he must take, and if he would wait a few moments till she could get her horse ready, she would show him the way.

'Well,' said he, 'had company is better than none—make haste.'

After jogging on five or six miles the gentleman asked if he had not come to the road he must take.

'O, yes,' said she, 'we have passed it two or three miles back; but I thought had company was better than none, so I kept you along with me.'

BEFORE AND AFTER.—Uncle Sam had a neighbor who was in the habit of working on Sunday, but after a while he joined the church. One day he met the minister to whose church he belonged.

'Well, Uncle Sam,' said he, 'do you see any difference in Mr. P. since he joined the church?'

'Oh, yes,' said Uncle Sam, 'a great difference. Before, when he went out to mend his fences on Sunday, he carried his axe on his shoulder, but now he carries it under his overcoat.'

—Mr. Squigby, said a military man, who happened to meet the joker in Washington.

Mr. Squigby, can you tell me the number of General Hooker's residence? 'No,' replied S.; 'I cannot tell the number, but I can tell you where you can find his name.'

'Where?' eagerly asked brass buttons.

'In everybody's mouth.'

PENCE AND POUNDS.—'Will you give me them pennies now?' said a big newsboy to a little one, after giving him a severe thumping. 'No, I won't,' exclaimed the little one. 'Then I'll give you another pound.' 'Pound away; me and Dr. Franklin agrees,' Dr. Franklin says, 'Take care of the pence, and the pounds will take care of themselves.'

A QUAKER'S WIFE.—'Ah John, you won't have me much longer! I shall never leave this bed alive!' 'Please thyself, Betty, and thee'll please me,' returned John, with great equanimity. 'I have been a good wife to you John,' persisted the dying woman. 'Middlin, Betty, middlin,' responded the matter-of-fact husband.

—The following marriage recently took place: Loren S. Cowles of Hartford, and Lucy A. Wood of Windsor Locks.

Lo! what an all-consuming flame Is the love-passion of two souls; For here you see a piece of Wood In just two minutes changed to Cowles.

'Where do you hail from?' asked a Yankee of a traveller.

'Where do you rain from?'

'Don't rain at all,' said the astonished Jonathan.

'Neither do I hail—so mind your own business.'

WHAT HE PLANTED.—'I say, Mike, what sort of potatoes are those you are planting?' 'Raw ones, to be sure; yer honor wouldn't be thinking I would plant boiled ones.'

—The best way to succeed in the grocery business is to sell cheap and give light weight. The former will bring you customers, and the latter will enable you to skin them.

DESPERATE.—A desperate chap recently made the determinate resolution of marrying the girl he was in pursuit of, if he never had another as long as he lived.

A GOOD BUSINESS.—A wit once asked a peasant what part he performed in the great drama of life?—'I mind my own business,' was the reply.

—A census-taker found a woman who gave her own age as twenty-eight years, and that of her oldest son as twenty-three.

—He who writes what is wrong, wrongs what is right.
